

Counseling Resource Directory

The decision to seek counsel from a professional is wonderfully courageous and offers hope amidst difficulty. We want to encourage you as you take this next step toward Christ.

The selection of a professional is an extremely personal decision. Mental health experts agree the most important aspect of counseling is the relationship between the counselor and the client. You are the only one who can decide if the counselor understands your pain, genuinely relates to you and offers acceptance, all of which are critical to creating an atmosphere for change. As in any relationship, you and the counselor may “click” immediately, but it may also take more than one attempt to find the right fit.

Other than state licensure, there is no standard measurement for competence in counseling. The counselors in this directory have been suggested by Granger Community Church (GCC) staff and ministry leaders, whom we trust. The counselors chosen for this directory have demonstrated their ability to show empathy, be genuine and offer acceptance. These counselors have not been assessed on their beliefs about Christianity. However, many of them are followers of Jesus Christ.

The agencies in this directory have agreed to have their names listed and to receive calls from GCC attendees or others who ask for direction to counseling resources. By using the Counseling Resource Directory, you are accepting the terms and conditions of the disclaimer statement.
